PLANTING AND CULTURE

PLANTING—Gladioli can be planted at the time you begin making your garden, and if a prolonged blooming season is desired, plantings should be made at intervals of two weeks; this may be continued until late in June in the eastern and middle western states, and as late as the latter part of July along the coast of California.

When working the ground, keep in mind that it should be thoroughly pulverized to a depth of at least ten inches, then pack the soil firmly before planting.

The better the condition of the soil and the richer it can be made, the better your results will be.

FERTILIZER—Do not use fresh manure at planting time; well-rotted cow manure, thoroughly spaded into the soil before planting and also used as a mulch between the rows after planting is the best fertilizer that I know of, although any high-grade potato fertilizer may be used, taking care not to get it on too heavy or too close to the plants for fear of burning them. When applying commercial fertilizer the best method is to put it between the rows and then cultivate it into the soil.

Bulbs should be planted from 4 to 6 inches apart in the rows and rows should be at least 18 inches apart. If planted in beds, bulbs should be planted from 8 to 10 inches apart each way, at a depth of from 3 to 5 inches, depending on size of bulbs, and texture of the soil, the larger bulbs being planted the deepest. In heavy clay or adobe soil, planting should be more shallow than in sandy or light soil.

Keep well cultivated at all times, and do not allow a hard crust to form around plants at any time. When blooming spikes begin to appear, cultivation should not be deeper than two inches, but at the time they should be well watered; the best way is to water thoroughly and as soon as the ground dries off enough to permit, cultivate lightly but thoroughly so as to leave a mulch of dust on top of the soil. A good watering once or possibly twice a week is plenty in most localities.

Plant in full sunlight if possible, for the gladioli is a sun-loving flower.

When cutting your flowers you should leave at least four good leaves on each stalk, if you wish your bulbs to mature and ripen so as to make strong, healthy bulbs for next year's flowering.

The bulbs should be dug before the foliage or stalk has become entirely dry. Cut stalks close to the bulb and dry them in the air and sun for a few days or a week, then store in a cool, dry place until time to plant again. In concluding, I should like to advise every flower lover to subscribe to the "Flower Grower" published by Madison Cooper, Calcium, New York. $1.50 per year.
